[The quality of life in the general population: results of the SIPI study]. The results of the SIPI study (Servizio Epidemiologico e Prevenzione Internazionale) of the Italian Ministry of Health are reported. The study was carried out in the Italian territory between May and August 1996. The sample of randomly selected subjects (6,003) was representative of the country's general population. Their quality of life was evaluated by means of a questionnaire designed to be completed anonymously by subjects. Data were collected by means of a computerized data entry system. The most representative domains of the quality of life were: physical functioning (43% of the population had problems), mental functioning (39% of the population had problems), self-perceived health (30% of the population had problems), general health perception (21% of the population had problems), and limitation of activities (19% of the population had problems). The percentage of people experiencing a limitation of an activity varied between 5 and 41%. Men were more likely to experience a limitation of a single activity than women (32% and 26%, respectively). Subjects with a low educational level showed higher rates of limitation of activities than the other educational groups. Among individuals of lower educational level, low income was the most frequent factor limiting activities. Most individuals experienced some limitation of their activities, although it should be borne in mind that the age groups examined (30-44, 45-54, 55-64, 65-74, 75-84, 85 years) were close to old age. This latter was the factor that had the greatest impact on the quality of life. The results of the SIPI study indicated that, in the country's general population, the influence of chronic diseases was widespread and had a Customer Review team. Now we have a look at the design and delivery of a completely new customer review system to our elearning customer. As we mentioned in a previous blog the new system was quite a challenge. In this blog we will discuss a number of the challenges we faced and the lessons we learnt. With the Customer Reviews forum itself being pretty complex we decided that this would not be an area that would benefit from the use of XML. As a result we decided to create a separate object/tag based approach. This allowed us to tackle the challenge in a number of different ways as we detailed below.

Rationale for new solution The current forum was a Java applet. This meant that it was very difficult to upgrade. The existing code could not be easily extended to accommodate new functionality. Web standards were not enforced. The code was difficult to maintain. The Code base was highly complex. The code was difficult to debug. Not all knowledge was captured in the system. No testing 77a5ca646e replaces the classic folder icon with a padlock. Similarly, you can easily unlock any folder, by clicking the second button, 'Unlock', then select the desired folder. The directories are simply inaccessible, no matter which program you use to open them. Password protection The access to iNaVB Folder Protector's interface is also locked, in order to block unauthorised users from encrypting or decrypting folders without your notice.
