Many studies have shown that salsalate, a non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drug, inhibits the production of inflammatory cytokines (IL-1 and TNF) in cell culture and in vivo. We have examined the effects of salsalate on the activation of vascular smooth muscle cells in response to various stimuli. Perfused rat aortas were incubated in the presence or absence of salsalate (10-20 microM) for different periods of time and then stimulated with 2.5 units/ml of human thrombin, 2.5 microg/ml of human PAF or 100 ng/ml of human IL-1beta. Incubation of vascular smooth muscle cells with salsalate inhibited the production of the inflammatory cytokines IL-1beta and TNF. Salsalate also inhibited the production of IL-1beta in cytokine-stimulated vascular smooth muscle cells. NF-kappaB has been shown to be one of the transcription factors responsible for the induction of the inflammatory cytokines. Activated NF-kappaB was detected in the nucleus
