Universal Type Server Review: If I use Microsoft Word or any other type application I'm used to, I'm usually not really happy with the fonts of the font sheet. Let's say, I don't like "Calibri", I'd like to use "Arial", but the Microsoft Word shows me "Calibri", that's annoying. So I want to change it. There is no problem. There are font substitution on words, so I type in another font. But when I activate the substitution, the "Calibri" doesn't disappear but stays. The "Arial" substitute is shown on top of the page but the "Calibri" remains.

Universal Type Server is a software that helps you with that problem. It's not only a substitute, but you can also use the font directly, which is a nice thing. But the application is just a nice to use software. It's not made for developers that want to add functionality, it's made for people like me. You have a font list and you can manage that list, you can import and export font lists, you have a install/uninstall button and that's it. That's pretty much it. The installer adds the software to the hard drive and the user account is created automatically. The user can use all the fonts from the hard drive and switch between the fonts from the context menu. That's all you can do with this software. This is what I think is the main problem with this software. A software developer that want to add functionality
