Academic Ethics and Internet Use by Teacher's Resources - By Rodger V. Lienhard, Douglas J. Lienhard, and Kristine H. Matlock, Books on Teaching and Learning Science Grades 6 to 9. Incorporate technology-based learning into science teaching to improve student understanding of science, promote creativity, and increase student interest and motivation. This book is intended to encourage science teachers to integrate technologies, such as the internet, into their teaching. This book presents the authors' experiences as teachers who are deeply engaged in integrating the internet into their science teaching. Incorporating Technology into Science Classrooms, Book Summary: This book is the culmination of the authors' experiences in using technology in their science classrooms. The book offers an in-depth look at the authors' innovative, technology-based approaches to teaching a first-grade science unit on rainbows and thunderstorms. The authors discuss their experiences using technologies, such as the internet, in their classrooms, which they believe have encouraged students to approach science learning in new ways. Technology has the potential to enhance students' interest in science, enhance student learning, and increase students' understanding of science. This book includes a discussion of issues that teachers may encounter when integrating the internet into science classes. The authors propose innovative and student-centered approaches to incorporating the internet into science lessons, for example, using the internet to explore nature, explore the public health impact of the internet, and use the internet to support students in understanding science concepts. The authors provide both concrete examples of how they incorporated the internet into science lessons as well as their personal experiences as science teachers. Incorporating Technology into Science Classrooms is an ideal book for K-12 science teachers who want to better understand the benefits of integrating technology into their classrooms.
